the themes in his story concerning political intrigue, violence, betrayal, sensuality and power are still very much a part of today's scene. Harold Robbins will take you on a journey across the world in jet-set style through his main character, Dax Xenos, an international playboy who has known the ultimate agonies and ecstasies of life.

As a teenager, I enjoyed reading Harold Robbins well written trash novels. After seeing "The Carpetbaggers" and several other adaptations, I'd have to say "The Adventurers" is the closest in spirit to Robbins original. This is in part because it was made in the 'Post-Code' era (after 1968) and is very explicit regarding the sex and violence.
